ORDER AFFIRMING DECISION

13 THIS MATTER comes before the Court based upon the parties' cross 14
15 motions for summary judgment. At issue is the validity of a decision denying 16
17 Joshua J. Waterhouse's application for supplemental security income. He is 18
19 represented by David L. Lybbert. The Acting Commissioner is represented by 20
Amanda Schapel.

21 BACKGROUND
22

23 Joshua J. Waterhouse was born on February 21, 1990. (TR 50.) During 24
25 2012, he applied for Title XVI supplemental security income ("SSI"). 42 U.S.C. §§
26
27 1381-1383f. The Social Security Administration ("SSA") denied his initial

1 application and his request for reconsideration, whereupon he exercised his
2 right to a hearing before an administrative law judge, who issued an unfavorable
3 ruling on June 2, 2014. Mr. Waterhouse challenges determinations the ALJ made
4 at steps two, four, and five in the SSA's five-step sequential evaluation process.
6 20 C.F.R. § 416.920(a)(4).

9 At step two, the ALJ had to decide whether Mr. Waterhouse is severely
10 impaired. 20 C.F.R. § 416.920(a)(4)(ii). He found Mr. Waterhouse suffers from 11 "[l]eft inguinal hernia, status post mesh repair with ongoing pain; testicular pain;
12 dysthymic disorder¹ ; learning disorder, not otherwise specified; pain disorder;
13 [and] gastritis[.]" (TR 22.) Mr. Waterhouse says the ALJ's finding is correct as 14 far as it goes, but, in his opinion, it does not go far enough. He alleges he is 15 significantly more impaired than the ALJ acknowledged.
16
18
19
20
21
22

23 ¹ Dysthymic disorder" is "a chronic mood disorder characterized by depressed
24 feeling (sad, blue, low)" (http://medical-
25 dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/browse/dysthymia (quoting Miller-Keane 26 Encyclopedia and Dictionary of Medicine) (last visited March __, 2017).
27

1 At step four, the ALJ had to formulate Mr. Waterhouse's residual functional
2 capacity ("RFC"). 20 C.F.R. § 416.920(a)(4)(iv). In order to complete this task,
4 the ALJ analyzed his ability to perform specific work-related functions. SSR 96-
6 8p, 1996 WL 374184, at *3 (July 2, 1996). This analysis enabled the ALJ to
8 determine the most he can do despite his impairments. 20 C.F.R. §
10 416.945(a)(1). Typically, an ALJ will express a claimant's RFC in terms of an 11
12 exertional level, i.e., whether the claimant is capable of performing a job that is 13
14 "sedentary, light, medium, heavy, [or] very heavy." 20 C.F.R. § 416.967.

15
16 Determining a claimant's RFC is fact intensive. Here, the ALJ was 17
18 confronted with conflicting evidence. Ultimately, he gave little weight to the 19
20 opinions of two examining physicians (Shannon Radke, M.D., and Geoff Jones, 21
22 M.D.) and two examining psychologists (Mahlon Dalley, Ph.D., and John Arnold, 23
24 Ph.D.). Not only that, but also the ALJ discounted Mr. Waterhouse's description
25
26 of his symptoms. The ALJ's assessment of the evidence led him to find Mr.
27
Waterhouse has the "residual functional capacity to perform light work," though

1 his ability to work at that exertional level is subject to a number of limitations.

2 (TR 24.)

4 Having made that finding, the ALJ was in a position to determine whether
6 Mr. Waterhouse is capable of performing “past relevant work.” See 20 C.F.R. §
7 416.965(a). As the ALJ noted, Mr. Waterhouse has limited work experience.

9 However, such jobs as he has held have required at least a medium level of 10
11 exertion. (TR 68.) The ALJ found he no longer is capable of holding jobs that 12
13 require a medium exertional level. Consequently, he cannot perform his past
14
15 relevant work. (TR 30.) That being so, the ALJ pressed on to the final step in the 16
17 sequential evaluation process.

18 At step five, the ALJ had to determine whether Mr. Waterhouse can make 19
20 the adjustment to other types of work given his age, education, work experience, 21
22 and RFC. 20 C.F.R. § 416.920(a)(4)(v). The burden in that regard falls upon the 23
24 Commissioner, who must provide evidence “demonstrating other work exists in 25
26 significant numbers in the national economy that [the claimant] can do, given 27
[his] residual functional capacity and vocational factors[.]” 20 C.F.R. §§

1 404.1560(c)(2); 416.960(c)(2). The Commissioner may satisfy the burden
2 either “(1) by the testimony of a vocational expert, or (2) by reference to the 3 Medical-Vocational Guidelines at 20 C.F.R. pt. 404, subpt. P, app. 2.” Lounsbury
4 v. Barnhart, 468 F.3d 1111, 1114 (9th Cir.2006). Here, the ALJ asked a
5 vocational expert to testify. Based upon his testimony, the ALJ found “there are 6 jobs that exist in significant numbers in the national economy that [Mr.
7 Waterhouse] can perform.” (TR 30.) According to the ALJ, the list of jobs
8 includes “small products assembler,” “production inspector,” and “hand packer.”
9 (TR 31.) Since, in the ALJ’s opinion, Mr. Waterhouse “is capable of making a 10 successful adjustment to other work that exists in significant numbers in the 11 national economy[,]” he is not disabled. Id.

13
14
15
16
17
18
19 Mr. Waterhouse asked the Appeals Council to review the ALJ’s unfavorable 20 ruling. In support of his request, he submitted an assessment that was signed by 21 both Chris Buscher, a physician’s assistant, and Geoff Jones, a physician. (TR 5.)

23
24 The assessment states:
25
26
27

1 For medical reasons, please excuse [Joshua J. Waterhouse] from any work.
2 Josh continues to be seen in our clinic for ongoing chronic pain, chronic
3 diarrhea. He is unable to work at this time. We continue to perform
4 testing to try and get Josh back to full health.

5 (TR 713.) The Appeals Council considered the assessment, but nevertheless 6 denied review on September 16, 2015. At that point, the ALJ's unfavorable
7 ruling became the final decision of the Commissioner of the Social Security
8 Administration. 20 C.F.R. § 416.1484(b)(2). Mr. Waterhouse commenced this 9 action on November 4, 2015.

13 STANDARD OF REVIEW

15 A district court may enter "judgment affirming, modifying, or reversing the 16 decision of the Commissioner of Social Security, with or without remanding the 17 cause for a rehearing." 42 U.S.C. § 405(g). However, review is limited. "The 18 findings of the Commissioner of Social Security as to any fact, if supported by 19 substantial evidence, shall be conclusive[.]" Id. As a result, the Commissioner's 20 decision "will be disturbed only if it is not supported by substantial evidence or 21 it is based on legal error." Green v. Heckler, 803 F.2d 528, 529 (9th Cir.1986).
22

26
27 "Substantial evidence means more than a mere scintilla, . . . but less than a preponderance.” Desrosiers v. Sec’y of Health & Human Servs., 846 F.2d 573, 576 (9th Cir.1988) (internal punctuation and citations omitted).

ANALYSIS

Dr. Shannon Radke, M.D.

On May 10, 2010, Dr. Shannon Radke, M.D., conducted a physical examination of Mr. Waterhouse at the request of the Washington Department of Social and Health Services (“DSHS”). (TR 590.) Dr. Radke diagnosed hydrocele² and abdominal pain. (TR 589.) In view of her diagnosis, she determined Mr. Waterhouse would be unable to perform jobs that required more than sedentary work, id., though she also thought his physical problems were amenable to treatment. (TR 590.) On January 5, 2011, Dr. Radke conducted a supplemental examination. (TR 592.) She found that Mr. Waterhouse’s ability to perform several basic movements -- standing, sitting, and lifting -- was impaired. Id.

² The term “hydrocele” refers to a “pathological accumulation of serous fluid in a bodily cavity, especially in the scrotal pouch.” (<http://medical-dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/browse/hydrocele> (quoting American Heritage Dictionary) (last visited March __, 2017).

1 Accordingly, she recommended he “[a]void frequent bending, avoid twisting at 2 waist.” (TR 592.) She estimated he would remain impaired for six months. (TR
3 591.)

5 The ALJ gave Dr. Radke’s 2011 assessment “little weight.” (TR 30.) While 6 he did not question the validity of her assessment at the time she rendered it, he
8 decided it had limited probative value in 2014. Mr. Waterhouse disagrees with 9 the ALJ’s decision to discount the significance of Dr. Radke’s 2011 assessment.
10
11 He argues the ALJ should have ignored her estimated recovery time because, 12
13 contrary to her expectations, the conditions she diagnosed did not go away.
14

16 It is important to remember Dr. Radke rendered her assessment of his 17
18 impairments based upon the symptoms she observed on January 5, 2011. At 19
20 about the same time or, perhaps, shortly thereafter, he had hydrocele surgery.³
21
22 The procedure appears to have been at least partially successful, because the 23
24 hydrocele diminished in size between May 11, 2010, and September 19, 2011.

24 ³ Dr. Radke says surgery occurred on January 4, 2011. (TR 591-92.) By contrast,
25 Dr. Sara K. Ragsdale, D.O., says it occurred at some point during February. (TR 26 266.)
27

1 (TR 266.) It's unclear whether Dr. Radke would have revised her assessment of 2 Mr. Waterhouse had she examined him during the summer or fall of 2011.

4 However, the fact remains she did not perform such an examination.

6 Consequently, the ALJ had to decide how much weight to give to an assessment
7 that was made before he fully recovered. Since Mr. Waterhouse's condition
9 appears to have improved as a result of surgery, it was not unreasonable for the 10
11 ALJ to question whether Dr. Radke's 2011 assessment remained relevant several 12
13 years later.

14 Dr. Geoffrey Jones, M.D.

16 On October 25, 2010, Dr. Geoffrey Jones, M.D., performed a physical 17
18 examination of Mr. Waterhouse at the request of the Washington DSHS. Dr.
19
20 Jones diagnosed several abnormalities, two of which he thought would affect Mr.
21
22 Waterhouse's ability to perform work-related activities. The more severe of the 23
24 two was the hydrocele Dr. Radke also observed. (TR 583.) Dr. Jones thought the 25
26 condition required surgery (TR 584), and he thought Mr. Waterhouse's ability to 27
work would remain impaired for at least three months. (TR 585.) That said, it

1 appears Dr. Jones was guardedly optimistic surgery would relieve Mr.
2 Waterhouse's symptoms. He recommended reevaluation of Mr. Waterhouse
3 employability two to three weeks following surgery. (TR 584.) Until then, Dr.
4 Jones thought Mr. Waterhouse should limit himself to sedentary work. (TR 583.)

7 The ALJ discounted Dr. Jones' determination. Apparently, he decided it
8 had lost most of its probative value by the time he conducted the administrative 9 hearing in 2014. Mr. Waterhouse disagrees with the ALJ's assessment of Dr.
10 Jones' determination. He claims the ALJ should have given it more weight.

13 Once again, it is important to note Dr. Jones' made his determination prior 14 to hydrocele surgery. In fairness to Mr. Waterhouse, the surgery may not have 15 helped as much as Dr. Jones expected. For example, on January 13, 2012, Mr.
16 Waterhouse advised a physician's assistance he was experiencing "[c]hronic
17 testicular pain[.]" (TR 380.) However, whether or not the surgery accomplished
18 as much as Dr. Jones expected, it is clear Mr. Waterhouse's symptoms changed 19 between 2010 and 2014. Consequently, it was appropriate for the ALJ to 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27

1 consider Mr. Waterhouse's changed symptoms in deciding how much weight to
2 give to a determination Dr. Jones made prior to surgery.

4 Mahlon Dalley and John Arnold

6 On February 6, 2012, Mahlon Dalley, Ph.D., conducted a psychological
7 examination of Mr. Waterhouse at the request of the Washington DSHS. As part
8 of the process, Dr. Dalley administered a number of psychological tests. (TR
9 360-61.) He diagnosed "Pain Disorder Associated with Both Psychological 10 Factors and a General Medical Condition; Dysthymic Disorder, Late Onset; [and]
11 Learning Disorder NOS." (TR 356.) This diagnosis led to a pessimistic
12 prognosis. Dr. Dalley concluded that "features of Mr. Waterhouse's depression, 13 anxiety, and health concerns are likely to interfere with his ability to be 14 successful in a normal employment position; therefore, it is estimated that he 15 will be work impaired for a 12 . . . [month] time period.⁴" (TR 358.)
16
17
18
19
20
21
22

23 The ALJ considered Dr. Dalley's assessment, but gave it "little weight." (TR
24 29.) First, the ALJ was concerned Dr. Dalley's diagnosis is based largely upon Mr.
25

26 ⁴ The quoted material has been modified to correct a typographical error.
27

1 Waterhouse's subjective complaints about his physical impairments. Second,
2 the ALJ was concerned Dr. Dalley's finding concerning anxiety is not supported
3 by test results. Third, he was concerned Dr. Dalley's ultimate conclusion -- i.e., 4 that Mr. Waterhouse is unable to work -- is contradicted by the results of some 5 of the psychological tests Dr. Dalley administered. Finally, the ALJ was 6 concerned by the fact a consulting psychologist who reviewed Dr. Dalley's report
7 does not think his conclusions are supported by the data he relied upon.

9 The consulting psychologist who reviewed Dr. Dalley's report is R. Renee
10 Eisenhauer, Ph.D. Dr. Eisenhauer disagrees with Dr. Dalley's determination Mr.
11 Waterhouse suffers from "[p]ain disorder associated with psychological and 12 medical factors." (TR 600.) In her opinion, in order for such a diagnosis to be 13 warranted, the record would have to include evidence indicating "that 14 psychological factors play a significant factor in the causation, maintenance or 15 exacerbation of the pain." (TR 600.) Dr. Eisenhauer does not think the record
16 contains such evidence. Thus, according to her, the disputed diagnosis is 17 unsupported. (TR 600.) And that is not all. She also questions Dr. Dalley's
18

1 interpretation of the test results. While she acknowledges Mr. Waterhouse has a
2 “low average” IQ, and while she acknowledges some of his test results were
4 “borderline,” she nevertheless thinks “he retains the ability to engage in simple
6 as well as complex tasks from a cognitive perspective.” (TR 600.)

7 As Mr. Waterhouse points out, an ALJ may not discount the opinions of an
9 examining expert based solely upon a contrary opinion from a consulting expert.
10
11 Morgan v. Comm’r, 169 F.3d 595, 602 (9th Cir. 1999). The preceding principle 12
13 applies with special force in this case because Dr. Dalley’s opinions are 14
15 congruent with those of John Arnold, Ph.D., a clinical psychologist who examined
16
17 Mr. Waterhouse on February 21, 2012. Dr. Arnold diagnosed “Dysthymic 18
19 Disorder, Late Onset R/O Social Phobia (generalized) Learning Disorder, NOS 20
21 (by hx) Pain Disorder w/both psych factors & a general medical condition.” (TR
22
23 624.) In view of his diagnosis, Dr. Arnold thought Mr. Waterhouse would 24
25 experience “marked” limitations upon his ability to “[u]nderstand, remember, 26
27 and persist in tasks by following detailed instructions”; “[p]erform activities within a schedule, maintain regular attendance, and be punctual . . . without

1 special supervision”; “[l]earn new tasks”; “[m]aintain appropriate behavior in a
2 work setting”; and “[c]omplete a normal work day.” (TR625.)

4 The ALJ was not persuaded by Dr. Arnold’s assessment, according it “little 5 weight.” (TR 29.) The ALJ thought Dr. Arnold’s assessment was unduly
6 pessimistic given Mr. Waterhouse’s performance during the mental status
7 examination, the fact he has not participated in mental health treatment, and his
8 ability to perform the activities that are required for daily living. (TR 29.)
10
11

12 Dr. Arnold was not the last expert to assess the impact of Mr. Waterhouse’s 13 psychological impairments. On two subsequent occasions during 2012, the 14 Social Security Administration asked mental health professionals to review Mr.
15 Waterhouse’s file. The first of the two reviews was conducted by Eugene Kester,
16 M.D., a psychiatrist. Based upon the information that was available to him, Dr.
17 Kester made several important findings: First, he found Mr. Waterhouse “can 18 understand and remember simple instructions, but due to his lower academic 19 training and skills, as well as possible learning disability[,] he will have 20 increasing difficulty understanding increasingly complex or detailed tasks.” (TR
21
22
23
24
25
26
27

1 85.) Second, Dr. Kester found Mr. Waterhouse “would work best in [an]
2 environment that does not involve close contact w/ co-workers or [the] general
3 public.” (TR 86.) Finally, Dr. Kester found Mr. Waterhouse “may need extra time
4 and/or instruction in learning new tasks. . . . He is able to make simple plans
5 and follow basic instructions.” (TR 87.)

9 The ALJ gave “significant weight” to Dr. Kester’s findings. To begin with,
10 he thought they were supported by the record. In addition, he noted they were 11 ratified by Sharon Underwood, Ph.D., a psychologist. (TR 98-100.) She, too, 12 reviewed Mr. Waterhouse’s medical and psychological records. (TR 92-94.) And 13 like Dr. Kester, she thought Dr. Dalley’s assessment was unduly pessimistic.
14
15
16

17 Neither Dr. Eisenhower nor Dr. Kester nor Dr. Underwood examined Mr.
18 Waterhouse. Instead, they based their determinations upon a review of his 19 medical and psychological records. By contrast, both Dr. Dalley and Dr. Arnold 20 examined Mr. Waterhouse. Since they are examining experts, the ALJ was 21 authorized to discount their respective assessments only if he provided “specific 22 and legitimate reasons” that are “supported by substantial evidence in the 23
25
26
27

1 record.” Reddick v. Chater, 157 F.3d 715, 725 (9th Cir.1998). Whether the ALJ
2 satisfied that standard is a close question.

4 It is useful to begin with the test results. While Mr. Waterhouse must cope
5 with significant cognitive limitations, he is not devoid of ability. For example, Dr.
6 Arnold found he is able to “[u]nderstand, remember, and persist in tasks by 7 following very short and simple instructions.” (TR 625.) Not only that, but also 8 he is able to “[p]erform routine tasks without special supervision.” Id.
10
11

12 Furthermore, Mr. Waterhouse did reasonably well on the mental status exams
13 Dr. Dalley administered. (TR 358.) Finally, and perhaps most importantly, there 14 is reason to believe Mr. Waterhouse’s psychological problems are amenable to 15 treatment. Dr. Dalley thinks Mr. Waterhouse “should begin counseling to gain 16 understanding of psychological issues that may be underlying his physical 17 concerns and also help lessen his anxiety and depression.” (TR 358.) He 18 recommended reevaluation after 12 months of treatment. Id. Similarly, Dr.
19 Arnold recommended, “Stable housing/Medical care and psychiatric 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
svs/counseling.” (TR 626.)

1 Mr. Waterhouse's potential amenability to treatment is an important
2 consideration in determining whether he is disabled. "An individual who would
3 otherwise be found to be under a disability, but who fails without justifiable
4 cause to follow treatment prescribed by a treating source which the Social 5 Security Administration (SSA) determines can be expected to restore the 6 individual's ability to work, cannot by virtue of such 'failure' be found to be 7 under a disability." SSR 82-59, 1982 WL 31384, at *1 (1982). Obviously, this
8 regulation is not directly on point. While both Dr. Dalley and Dr. Arnold
9 recommended counseling, neither of them offered to provide it. And it does not 10 appear Mr. Waterhouse has sought counseling on his own.

12
13
14
15
16
17
18 Admittedly, it may be difficult for Mr. Waterhouse to obtain the mental 19 health treatment he needs, but the fact it may be difficult does not mean it is 20 impossible. He is a comparatively young man -- 24 years old at the time of the 21 administrative hearing. While he faces significant challenges, he is not helpless.
22 His repeated requests for medical treatment indicate he is capable of looking out
23 for himself. See infra pp. 19-23. Thus, it was reasonable for the ALJ to expect
24
25
26
27

1 him to seek counseling; just as it was reasonable for the ALJ to assume Mr.
2 Waterhouse's mental impairments are potentially amenable to treatment. After
4 all, both Dr. Dalley and Dr. Arnold recommended counseling. Presumably, they
6 made the recommendation because they thought it would help.

7 All of which leads to a critical consideration. Drs. Dalley and Arnold
9 rendered their psychological assessments before Mr. Waterhouse sought or 10
11 received counseling. If, in fact, Mr. Waterhouse's psychological problems are 12
13 amenable to treatment (and such a finding is supported by substantial 14
15 evidence), then Dr. Dalley's and Dr. Arnold's assessments may turn out to be 16
17 unduly pessimistic. It well may be that once Mr. Waterhouse begins to 18
19 participate in counseling, he will be able to manage his problems well enough to 20
21 find gainful employment. Of course, it remains to be seen whether counseling
22
23 will be efficacious. However, until the results are in, it is appropriate to treat Dr.
24
25 Dalley's and Dr. Arnold's assessments with respectful skepticism. Thus, the ALJ
26
27 did not err in declining to accept their pessimism as the final word on Mr.
Waterhouse's psychological condition.

Joshua Waterhouse

Mr. Waterhouse has been treated on numerous occasions. The following is a representative sample: On March 21, 2012, he went to Dr. Jones complaining of “stomach ache and throat issues.” (TR 376.) Dr. Jones diagnosed GERD [gastroesophageal reflux disease] and H. Pylori.⁵ (TR 376.) He prescribed medications, but in doing so, he noted “no acute distress . . . normal mood and affect; normal attention span and concentration.” (TR 377.) On April 12, 2012, Mr. Waterhouse went to Dirk Sypherd, M.D., complaining of “bilateral inguinal pain[.6]” (TR 498.) Dr. Sypherd tentatively diagnosed “chronic epididymitis.⁷”

⁵ “Helicobacter pylori” is “a gram-negative spiral bacterium that causes gastritis and pyloric ulcers in humans[.]” (http://medical-dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/browse/helicobacter pylori (quoting Miller-Keane Encyclopedia and Dictionary of Medicine) (last visited March __, 2017).

⁶ “Inguinal” means “pertaining to the groin.” (<http://medical-dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/browse/inguinal> (quoting Miller-Keane Encyclopedia and Dictionary of Medicine) (last visited March __, 2017).

⁷ “Epididymitis” is an “inflammation or infection of the epididymis. In this long coiled tube attached to the upper part of each testicle, sperm mature and are stored before ejaculation.” (<http://medical->

(TR 499.) He prescribed “[c]onservative treatment.” Id. On November 29, 2012, Mr. Waterhouse went to Sara K. Ragsdale, D.O., complaining of episodes of stomach pain. (TR 658.) He also told her he “keeps getting a lump in his throat.” Id. Dr. Ragsdale treated the latter with a medication for “post nasal drainage.” (TR 659.) However, she could not identify the source of the stomach pain. In the end, all she could do was advise him to refrain from eating or drinking things that “worsen reflux.” Id. Mr. Waterhouse returned to Dr. Ragsdale on December 17, 2012. He indicated, “He is nauseous if he doesn’t eat. He vomits 1-2 times per week. He has heartburn every day. He has occasional diarrhea, [but] no bloody or black stools.” (TR 662.) As before, Dr. Ragsdale was unable to identify the source of his complaints. She adjusted his medications, discussed the possibility his use of marijuana was causing vomiting, and referred him to a gastroenterologist. (TR 663.) On January 21, 2013, Philip M. Coff, M.D., performed an upper endoscopy. (TR 668.) Dr. Coff diagnosed “[r]eflux dictionary.thefreedictionary.com/browse/epididymitis (quoting Gale Encyclopedia of Medicine) (last visited Feb. __, 2017).

1 esophagitis, possible short segment Barrett's esophagus, mild gastritis, and
2 duodenitis." Id. On March 27, 2013, Mr. Waterhouse returned to Dr. Sypherd
3 complaining of a hernia, as well as testicular pain. Dr. Sypherd examined Mr.
4 Waterhouse's scrotum, which appeared to be normal. (TR 643.) As for the 5 hernia, Dr. Sypherd referred Mr. Waterhouse to a general surgeon. Id. On May 3,
6 2013, Mr. Waterhouse went back to Dr. Ragsdale complaining of "left inguinal
7 pain." (TR 678.) And that was not his only complaint. He also complained he 8 was unable to have a bowel movement "unless he [bore] down 'extremely hard'"
9 (which hurt), just as he could not empty his bladder "without bearing down"
10 (which also hurt). Id. Dr. Ragsdale noted he was "angry and tearful." He told 11 her, "[N]obody cares what happens to me except me. You never do anything for 12 me." Id. Dr. Ragsdale spent 30 minutes attempting to encourage Mr.
13 Waterhouse, to little avail. In the end, the best she could do was refer him to a 14 urologist in Spokane. (TR 679.) A number of months went by. On January 15,
15 2014, Mr. Waterhouse went to Chris Buscher complaining of "abdominal pain."
16 (TR 617.) As will be recalled, the latter is a physician's assistant ("PAC"). PAC

1 Buscher ordered a number of tests, but he was unable to identify the source of 2 the pain. (TR 618.) Mr. Waterhouse next went to PAC Buscher on February 25,
3 2014. He complained of GERD and painful urination. (TR 704.) PAC Buscher
4 had nothing to offer Mr. Waterhouse to ease the pain he was experiencing when 5 urinating. As for the GERD symptoms, PAC Buscher gave Mr. Waterhouse
6 samples of a new medication and referred him to Dr. Jones for additional testing.
7 (TR 705-06.) Dr. Jones examined Mr. Waterhouse on April 2, 2014, and decided
8 to perform an EGD.⁸ (TR 709.) On May 1, 2014, Mr. Waterhouse went to PAC
9 Buscher complaining of “[l]ung congestion” and “productive cough.” (TR 710.)
10 Mr. Waterhouse denied “nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, [or] constipation.” Id. He 11 was “alert and cooperative; normal mood and affect; normal attention span and 12 concentration.” (TR 711.) PAC Buscher treated him for acute bronchitis. Id.

1 Mr. Waterhouse's appointment with PAC Buscher appears to have been his 2 last medical appointment before the administrative hearing, which took place on 3 May 21, 2014. At the hearing, Mr. Waterhouse testified he experiences "[l]ots of 4 pain in his testicles and . . . groin." (TR 56.) He said the pain is exacerbated by 5 "walking, standing, going to the bathroom, sex." Id. He also testified he suffers
6 from alternating bouts of constipation and diarrhea. (TR 57.) He said he must 7 make repeated trips to the bathroom when an episode occurs. (TR 57-8.) In 8 addition to physical problems, Mr. Waterhouse also suffers from psychological 9 problems. He testified he suffers from depression and anxiety. (TR 59.) He also 10 said he has trouble concentrating. Id. ⁹

19 ⁹ On June 10, 2014, Dr. Jones and PAC Buscher jointly issued a brief note
20 concerning Mr. Waterhouse's condition. The note is quoted in full above. While 21 it is from an acceptable medical source, it does not indicate what Mr.
22 Waterhouse is capable of doing despite his impairments. 20 C.F.R. §
23 416.913(b)(6). The absence of such information limits the note's probative
24 value. Cf. Morgan v. Comm'r, 169 F.3d 595, 601 (9th Cir. 1999) (an ALJ may 25 discount an expert opinion which does not "show how [a claimant's] symptoms 26 translate into specific functional deficits which preclude work activity").
27

1 The ALJ was not unsympathetic. He found Mr. Waterhouse suffers from
2 several severe impairments. The ALJ further found his impairments reasonably
3 could be expected to cause the types of symptoms he described. (TR 25.)
5 Consequently, the ALJ was required to evaluate “the intensity, persistence, and 6 functionally limiting effects of the symptoms” in order to determine “the extent
7 to which the symptoms affect [Mr. Waterhouse’s] ability to do basic work
8 activities.” SSR 96–7p, 1996 WL 374186, at *2 (July 2, 1996). “This requires the 9 adjudicator to make a finding about the credibility of the individual's statements
10 about the symptom(s) and its functional effects.” Id. If there is no evidence of 11 malingering on the claimant's part, “the ALJ may reject the claimant's testimony
12 regarding the severity of her symptoms only if he makes specific findings stating 13 clear and convincing reasons for doing so.” Smolen v. Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1283
14 (9th Cir.1996).

23 The ALJ had no trouble finding Mr. Waterhouse has severe physical 24 impairments. And yet, as the ALJ also observed, there have been instances in 25 which Mr. Waterhouse complained of pain, but the health care provider who 26
27

1 examined him could not ascertain the source of the pain. See, e.g., TR 643 (Mr.
2 Waterhouse complained of testicular pain, but the examination of his left
3 scrotum was “entirely normal”); TR 617 (Mr. Waterhouse complained of 4 abdominal pain, but nothing showed up on a CT scan). Now, the fact a health 5 care provider cannot find a source of pain does not mean the person is 6 malingering. However, when a person repeatedly complains of pain, and there 7 are multiple occasions on which a health care provider cannot identify the 8 source of the pain, an ALJ reasonably may decide the person has a tendency to 9 overstate his symptoms. The ALJ’s concern in that regard was reinforced by 10 answers Mr. Waterhouse provided in a “Function Report” that is dated May 10, 11 2012. (TR 205.) In the report, Mr. Waterhouse acknowledged engaging in the 12 following activities: helping care for his girlfriend’s children (TR 199); helping 13 care for family pets, id.; completing his own personal care, id.; preparing simple 14 meals (TR 200); and helping with household chores and yardwork. Id. Of 15 course, the fact Mr. Waterhouse is able to engage in a number of activities that 16 are associated with daily living is not fatal to his disability claim. “ALJs must be

1 especially cautious in concluding that daily activities are inconsistent with 2 testimony about pain, because impairments that would unquestionably preclude
3 work and all the pressures of a workplace environment will often be consistent
4 with doing more than merely resting in bed all day.” Garrison v. Colvin, 759 F.3d
6 995, 1016 (9th Cir.2014).

9 Here, the ALJ exercised appropriate caution. Nevertheless, his decision to 10 discount Mr. Waterhouse’s description of his symptoms is controversial. A 11 different ALJ might have given it more weight. However, that does not mean the 12 ALJ erred. The issue is whether he provided clear and convincing reasons for his 13 determination. Smolen, 80 F.3d at 1283. As explained above, the ALJ’s principal
14 concern was that Mr. Waterhouse has a tendency to overstate his symptoms.
15 The ALJ’s concern in that regard is supported by at least two circumstances;
16 namely, the fact health care providers were unable to substantiate some of Mr.
17 Waterhouse’s complaints of pain, and the fact he reported engaging in activities 18 that indicate he has greater physical ability than he indicated during his 19 testimony at the administrative hearing. While such evidence is not 20
21
22
23
24
25

1 overwhelming, it need not be. The standard is much more generous. As long as 2 the ALJ provided valid reasons for discounting Mr. Waterhouse's testimony (and 3 he did), and as long as the ALJ's reasons are supported by more than a scintilla of 4 evidence (and they are), then his decision to discount Mr. Waterhouse's
5 testimony is entitled to deference. Green, 803 F.2d at 529.

8 9 RULING

10 Mr. Waterhouse suffers from severe physical and mental impairments.
11 That much is not in dispute. Rather, the issue is the extent to which his 12 impairments limit his ability to work. The ALJ decided Dr. Dalley, Dr. Arnold, 13 and Mr. Waterhouse were unduly pessimistic. A reasonable person could 14 disagree with the ALJ in that regard. However, in fairness to the ALJ, he had a
15 substantial basis for making the determinations he did. Mr. Waterhouse is still a 16 young man. While life is a struggle, he is not without ability. He is capable of 17 performing important tasks. Furthermore, there is reason to think his mental 18 impairments are amenable to treatment, and if he participates in therapy, not 19 only will he be better able to manage his mental impairments, but also he will be 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27

1 better able to cope with his physical impairments. All of this led the ALJ to find
2 Mr. Waterhouse has the “residual functional capacity to perform light work,”
4 though his ability to work at that exertional level is subject to a number of
6 limitations. Were the Court considering the evidence de novo, it well might
8 reach a more pessimistic conclusion than did the ALJ. But the Court is not
10 engaged in de novo review. The Court’s task is to determine whether the ALJ’s
11
12 determinations are free from legal error and supported by substantial evidence.
13
14 Measured against that deferential standard, the ALJ’s unfavorable ruling is 15
16 reasonable even though it is controversial.
